

Josh Wiebe Technology & Human Rights Fellow

Joshua Wiebe is the Technology & Human Rights Fellow at the Center for International Business & Human Rights. Joshua's work concentrates on current human rights issues arising from increased technological reliance and developments, including the increasing personalization and proliferation of fraudulent news. Based in Brussels, Belgium, Joshua focuses on European Union matters, representing the Center in European venues and reporting on important debates as they relate to the Center's interests. Joshua holds a Master's Degree (M.Sc.) with merit in the Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation from the London School of Economics and Political Science and graduated summa cum laude with a Bachelor's Degree (B.A.) in International Relations from Vesalius College in Brussels. Joshua participated in a number of technology-related extra-curricular programs throughout his education. His most memorable experiences have been competing in start-up competitions focused on social ventures. In 2017 he worked on 'The Constructivist'—a program meant to reduce the reach of fraudulent news, and in 2016 he worked on 'btogether'—a social network meant to foster integration between migrants and locals.
