About

Jason Hubbert is an Adjunct Professor of Law teaching in the M.L.S. in International Business Law program and is co-chair of the Young Alumni Council of Center for International Business and Human Rights. He is also Partner at Cowan, Hubbert & Franklin, PLLC, where he practices primarily in oil and gas law but advises a variety of other businesses on various legal issues.

Jason graduated with honors from the University of Oklahoma College of Law in 2016. While there, he served as Articles Editor for the Oklahoma Law Review and received the Outstanding Case Note Award for his published note on the Oklahoma Marketable Record Title Act. He also completed a one-semester externship in the U.S. State Department's Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Private International Law where his work primarily consisted of strategic analysis of the drafting papers of various treaties, researching and providing memoranda on the legal and political impediments to the ratification of certain treaties and feasibility of various projects proposed by intergovernmental organizations.

Prior to attending law school, Jason was a staff member and adjunct professor at a private liberal arts university in the Midwest. Before this, he served in local church ministry. He holds advanced degrees in Christian theology and Hebrew Bible, where his primary research areas included Ricoeurian hermeneutics, feminist Biblical criticism, and the Book of Judges. He is an ordained minister in the Church of the Nazarene.
